

As a resident of NJ and a citizen of a country that protects the rights of its' people, I feel I have the right to privacy in my own home. If I wish not to receive a call from telemarketers I do NOT feel that the now existing law should be any less stringent. The telemarketers in this state should respect the wishes of anyone who says "I do not want you or anyone from your company calling my home". By disrespecting this right and not aknowledging my right to say "NO" they have not only invaded my personal privacy, but they also display an attitude and behavior that should be considered harrassment. Our homes are the only place where we can have peace of mind, away from the stresses of the day. It should be our sanctuary where we spend private moments with families, which should not be compromised by intruding callers who introduce stress into the family household by persistently ignoring the wishes of those who express their wish to get off the phone. NJ's stringent "do not call" laws also protects its' residents from getting calls that attempt to committ fraud and scams on inocent hard working families.

Sincerely,

A NJ Citizen Whose Home is a Private Sanctuary - NOT open to unwelcome and uncaring telemarketers.
